

We've got a good crop of cherries this year and I was not looking forward to climbing a wobbly ladder to pick them. Then I had an idea (first one this year!). How about the scaffolding I just bought?

It works great, plus there is very little persuasion needed to get the guys to help me. It's sort of like monkey bars and yummy snack time combined:

We've got two trees, the guys are in the "Stella" and this is the "Bing":

This guy kept the robins guessing for a while, long enough for the fruit to almost ripen:

But eventually they figured it out:

No worries though, within a day or two those cherries will be perfect and we'll have a big pickin' party.
